I am honestly dissatisfied with this book, so much so that I would have probably not finished it had it been even a few pages longer. Looking at it now, I think that the premise and the idea of the book were both quite good, I do however feel as if it was just a short story written on one afternoon and published soon thereafter, without taking the time to really develop the plot, the characters or even the setting further. The whole storyline seemed super rushed, which made it really hard to ever fully connect to any events, while characters and setting stayed very dull throughout the whole book. I also wasn't impressed by the writing itself as it felt rather incoherent. There were passages that read really nicely, but then there were others, which used words and phrases that didn't seem completely right or appropriate. All in all, I gave the book one out of five stars and wouldn't really recommend it.
