BeautifulVon starbooksIHSuch a lovely story! Many people know this, that one place we feel represents our safe haven, that one place we enter and the worries of the world fade in the background. This story is about two people who realize the the Bluebird Inn is exactly that to both of them, however that place has to be renovated and given a new concept for the future and they come from quite different angles what would be the best for the place. Since the current owner cannot decide which might be better, he places The Bluebird Bet, a competition for them, to come up with, to show him which concept wouldbe best and leaves them alone for some weeks to start improvements and in the end present their plans. Of course they are both nice people and working together they get to know each other well and guess what, they like each other. I mean, it s a romance novel, what else do you expect? However, here s the big difference to other authors: Cheryl Harper s people are always believable, real life characters, these things could have happend. And I love them all the more for it. The dedicated small town doctor who wants that safe haven by the lake and wants it to be so for future guests, too. A happy place to share. The photographer who saw too much war and human misery and needs that safe haven to recover by building something new. They both need it and they both make it work, I liked them very much, they touched me, it is such a lovely story!
